Dear Mrs Sumeray,

RESPONSE TO REGULATION 28 REPORTS ISSUED IN REGARD TO MS A LEWIS AND MS J ORPIN - SUICIDE PREVENTION ON NATIONAL TRUST LAND ON THE ISLE OF WIGHT

In your Regulation 28 reports issued as a result of the investigations in to deaths of Joanna Orpin and Annette Lewis dated 31 Dec 19 and 13 Jan 20 respectively, you requested a response from the National Trust as to what action could be taken to prevent a recurrence of these incidents.

As you may be aware, the National Trust is the largest landowner on the island and currently has responsibility for just over 2,100ha. As an organisation, we take our role in safeguarding our visitors extremely seriously and will always seek to avoid accident, incident or injury wherever possible, but implicit in this is that we are also responsible for large areas of unsupervised open access public land with only a small team to manage it.

Nationally within the Trust, we manage a number of areas which face similar challenges with attempted or completed suicide attempts, most notably in the Birling Gap and Beachy Head area and further east in the White Cliffs of Dover area. The teams at those sites have been dealing first hand with distressed individuals and their relatives for a number of years.

I can confirm that a number of measures were already in place at Culver Down, including a total of seven Samaritans signs placed within the past few years. A schematic showing the locations of these signs is at Annex A. In addition, 'dragons teeth' (wooden bollards to prevent vehicle access) are in place opposite the exits from the car park and there is a ditch to ground vehicles approaching the cliff edge. There is also a barbed wire fence running the length of the cliff edge in which a vehicle became entangled during one attempt, but it is primarily a stock fence and it would not be economically viable or aesthetically appropriate to fence the several miles of coastline owned by the Trust.

In direct response to your request, the following actions have been undertaken:

1. Engagement with Public Health Principal: Health and Wellbeing – [REDACTED]

Yours sincerely,

[REDACTED]
